Head of Science

The Knox School

The Knox School is a values-driven co-educational independent school from Early Learning to Year 12 on one campus. The School prides itself in being a leader in personalised learning, knowing every student and providing a leading edge and contemporary educational offer. Located in Melbourne's eastern suburbs, with easy access via Eastlink, the School has developed significantly in recent times and enjoys a strong and vibrant relationship with its community. The School places a high priority on the development of its staff, providing significant opportunities for professional growth.

The School seeks to appoint a Head of Science who is an innovative and passionate educator and has demonstrated experience in:

- proactive engagement with students to foster interest in and a love of science
- an approach that supports students' positive sense of identity and love of learning
- articulating and implementing innovative education initiatives, underpinned by an evidence based approach, relevant to the sciences that are aligned with the School's Teaching and Learning strategy
- trans-disciplinary and experiential learning approaches within the overarching framework of STEM
- aligning an educational philosophy with an approach focussed on developing a student culture of achievement, personalised growth and improvement through focus and effort within the academic discipline and across the 6Cs
- building and sustaining a culture of innovation within a staff team which models professional excellence and high performance outcomes
- committing to personal professional learning and continuous improvement
- engaging School families and advocating for the School across the broader community.

The Head of Science is responsible for the planning, development and implementation of contemporary teaching and learning approaches aligned with The Knox School Strategic Plan and commitment to a model of personalised learning.
